Bugün "Tek bir insanlık olarak" paylaştığımız ortak değerlerimizi hatırlıyoruz. Bir yıl önce yaşadığımız ve milyonlarca kişiyi doğrudan etkileyen yıkıcı deprem felaketinin de gösterdiği gibi; bağlarımızı güçlendirmeye, farklı kültürler ve toplumlar arasında anlayış ve dayanışmayı teşvik etmeye her gün daha çok ihtiyaç duyuyoruz.

6 Şubat depreminin ardından bize yardım eli uzatan ilk ülkelerden biri Tayvan oldu. Taipei Ekonomi ve Kültür Misyonu ile iş birliğimiz, deprem sonrası insani yardım çalışmalarımıza önemli bir katkı sağladı. Tayvan halkının ve hükümetinin desteği, yaralarımızı sarmamıza ve geleceğe umutla bakmamıza yardımcı oldu.

Bizden 8 bin kilometre uzaktaki Tayvan halkının bu zor günlerimizde bizimle birlikte yas tuttuğunu, bizim acımıza içtenlikle ortak olduğunu biliyoruz. Tam bir yıldır deprem bölgesinde insani yardım, sağlık ve eğitim alanlarında sağladıkları destekler için minnettarız.

Tüm insanlık olarak bir araya gelip geçmiş trajedileri anlamamız ve dayanışma dolu bir gelecek inşa etmemiz umuduyla, Uluslararası İnsan Kardeşliği Günü kutlu olsun.

On this day, we remember the values we share as a "united human race." As demonstrated by the devastating earthquake disaster that directly affected millions of people one year ago, we have a growing need for strengthening our ties and encouraging understanding and solidarity among different cultures and communities.

In the aftermath of the earthquake that occurred on 6 February, Taiwan was among the first countries to extend a helping hand. Our collaboration with Taiwan in Türkiye 駐土耳其代表處 has contributed greatly to our humanitarian relief efforts. The support from the people and government of Taiwan has been instrumental in helping us heal wounds and look towards the future with hope.

We know that the people of Taiwan, despite the 8,000-kilometer distance, have mourned with us and sincerely shared in our pain during these challenging times. We are grateful for the support they have provided over the past year in the areas of humanitarian aid, health, and education in the earthquake-stricken region.

With the hope that we, as humanity, can unite to understand past tragedies and build a future filled with solidarity, we wish all a happy International Day of Human Fraternity.

Communities struggle to recover one year after earthquakes in Syria

In Northwest Syria, Mercy Corps installed water tanks to provide access to clean water in areas affected by the 2023 earthquake.

FEBRUARY 05, 2024

NICOLE HARK

Mercy Corps Country Director for Syria

On February 6, 2023, a 7.8 magnitude earthquake struck Northwest Syria and Turkey, killing 55,000 people and injuring tens of thousands more. One year on, the wake of the February 2023 earthquake continues to be a source of hardship for many communities in Northwest Syria who experienced additional earthquakes and aftershocks, food shortages, a dire economic situation, and the most substantial increase in hostilities in four years.

After a decade of conflict, more than 4 million people were already in dire need of humanitarian assistance in Northwest Syria before the earthquake struck. Today, approximately 2.9 million people are internally displaced, 2 million of whom live in overcrowded camps. Another estimated 800,000 of those people are sheltering in tents that are unable to withstand harsh weather conditions and have limited access to heating, clean water, or other necessities. “Our situation became even more challenging a year after the earthquake,” said a community member. “We lost our jobs, and now we are in debt to sustain our lives.”

Since 2008, Mercy Corps has been providing emergency aid and addressing sustained needs in Syria. We were already providing essential support including water, food, shelter, sanitation services, and livelihoods assistance to Syrians water, food, shelter, sanitation services, and livelihoods assistance to Syrians inside Northwest Syria displaced multiple times throughout the conflict. In February 2023, Mercy Corps mobilized quickly in the aftermath of the earthquake to deliver hygiene kits, shelter supplies, and other essential supplies to communities affected by the disaster.

Mercy Corps repaired water systems to restore access to water (left) and provided sanitation and hygiene services by collecting and disposing waste (right) at a camp for internally displaced people.

Following assessments of short- and long-term needs, and with funding support launched activities to rehabilitate shelters, water systems, bakeries, schools, and hospitals. More than a thousand households received cash aid, and Mercy Corps is providing training and cash grants for entrepreneurs to develop businesses and earn an income. In camps for internally displaced people, we have built water points in order to provide more sustainable access to clean water. In addition to providing food kits, Mercy Corps is providing wheat flour and yeast to four bakeries to sell subsidized bread to earthquake-affected communities, reaching more than 50,000 people by February 2024.

Multiple generations have been impacted by this devastating combination of man-made and natural disasters. Many families have lost income sources due to the earthquake and ongoing conflict—whether from the destruction of physical infrastructures and lack of new supplies or the economic crisis. In some areas, daily income is estimated at approximately .50 to .70 cents per day, which is barely enough to survive.

Even as people in Syria are grappling with recovery in a conflict-affected region after a catastrophic natural disaster, my team and I have also witnessed great efforts in community members coming together to rebuild in the face of near-constant obstacles and the toughest circumstances. As part of Mercy Corps' Taqaddam project, we are supporting community members to decide how to prioritize aid investments in their own communities. Participants are taking the lead in designing action plans in collaboration with local partners. Many of their decisions have been focused on providing livelihoods and small business support, vocational training, and job creation.

While the scale of need in Syria today is immense—requiring urgent access to essentials like water, food, shelter, livelihood support, and mental health services—communities are building toward more resilient approaches to recover from shocks or stresses. Through collaborative efforts with Mercy Corps, communities in Northwest Syria are establishing paths to more sustainable and resilient recovery.
